CHILEAN FJORDS SOUTHERN ROUTE

The voyage in the other direction from Port Montt also takes four days visiting the Morelada Canal, Errázuriz, Costa, Pulluche until the Gulf of Penas. Highlights of the voyage include the Pío XI Glacier, one of the largest in South America, and Port Edén. Our destination is Port Natales with the opportunity to visit the Torres del Paine National Park.

The inverse navigation to the Northern Route by the Chilean canals and fiords aboard the Navimag ferries until Port Natal.

Day 1 - Port Montt to the Gulf of Corcovado

We commence our voyage from Port Angelmó in Port Montt. After a welcoming and introductory talk we weigh anchor and leave by the Reloncaví estuary, arriving at night time in the Corcovado Gulf.

Day 2 - Moraleda Canal, Errázuriz, Costa, Pulluche until the Gulf of Penas

By the first light of dawn on our second day we navigate by the Moraleda Canal, which is one of the deepest parts of our voyage. We then continue by the Errázuriz canal and Costa before arriving at the Pulluche Canal which has the most dense and attractive vegetation protected by thousand year old forests of Cypresses and Lengas. Here we should see dolphins, sea lions and wild birds. In the afternoon we enter into the Pacific Ocean in the Gulf of Penas where there is a possibility of seeing the hump backed whales.

Day 3 - Canal Messier, Puerto Edén & Glaciar Pío XI

Our third day begins with the crossing of fiords and entering the Messier Canal, with a depth of 1270 metres the deepest of the region. Here it is possible to make out the cargo boat 'Capitan Leonidas' that went aground on a practically submerged island called 'bajo Cotopaxi' in the early seventies. It is now used as a navigational warning point. We continue our crossing until Angostura Inglesa with the aim of going to Port Edén on the Island of Wellington, one of the largest Chilean Islands.

Here there is the largest Chilean Park with its Magallánicos forests and Campos de Hielo Sur (Southern Ice fields). In the middle of the afternoon we will be able to see the imposing presence of the Glaciar Pío XI with its 1,265 square kilometre area, 6 kilometres of frontage and height of 100 metres and that is in full advance in contrast to the regression of most of the world's glaciers due to global warming. This is the route that travelled the first of the Kaweskar aborigines that inhabited this region. In Port Edén there are still descendants of the primitive indigenous peoples. On the Islands grow evergreens by the name of coihué that are used for thatching.

Day 4 - Angostura White & Puerto Natales

At daybreak on the fourth day we sail along the Sarmiento Canal until we come up against the very narrow straits of Angostura White which are only 80 metres wide. The boat passes by the Seno Unión until we finally reach Port Natales, the culmination of this interesting voyage of the Patagonian Canals. The name Natales comes from the latin 'Natalis' which signifies a bird and dates back to its foundation in the early 20th century.
